Local author spins a 'web' of dreams

A Devon author is seeking the help of West-country people, particularly its young people, to compile a list of the top ten best dreams.

Kerrie Clifford has written an adventure novel for young people set in a dream world entitled 'The Incubus Attack'. It is the start of an ongoing series called 'The Dynamo Tales', all written under the mysterious pen name 'Kasparo'. The book is being represented by the Inspira Group, a Literary Agent based in London.

Reader feedback has certainly been beyond Kerrie's expectations. Last year Kerrie printed some advance copies of the book and distributed them to a range of different aged people. She said "I could not believe the response from my readers. It blew me away. My agent's reader said it was one of the best books he'd read. I only hope that a publisher gets as excited about the book."

Kerrie's books grew out of the extraordinary dreams she had when she was younger. The Incubus Attack is set in a parallel world, the State of Sleep, and features a fantastic array of characters and locations, driven along with a fast-paced and exciting storyline. "Anything seems possible in your dreams when you are young. The world is at your command and you can do literally anything" said Kerrie. "As adults we seem to lose the power of our imagination". Kerrie is already half-way through writing the second novel in the series.

Kerrie is setting out to survey as many people as she can about their dreams through an anonymous web-based questionnaire, which can be found at <http://www.dynamotales.com>. She is inviting all readers to visit the site and take five minutes to complete the survey. "I would so appreciate the help of the people of the South West. I really want responses from people of all ages, but I am particularly keen to ensure I capture the dreams of my target reader group, young people aged nine to sixteen, and would like to thank everybody in advance for their help".

The survey is online until 25th January at <http://www.dynamotales.com>.
